Large Demand for Trained Chemists Is Being Met by University.

Columbia University is planning to creet a new building to add to the facilities of its department of chemistry. The present home of the department, Havemeyer Hall on Broadway at 118th street, is so crowded that the university's work in chemistry is being greatly hampered, and it has been found necessary to turn away many competent students who desired to undertake research. Tentative plans call for a new building on the ground north of Havemeyer Hall to house the whole work of the department of chemistry. Dean Fegram of the Schools of Mines. Engineering and Chemistry said yesterday that this new building, which is planned as a part of the university's programme for new structures costing several millions, will have a capacity at least equal to that of Havemeyer Hall.

olas Murray Butler "the central science," is undergoing enormous expansion in American universities and it has been necessary for Columbia to limit the number of its studend. Those studying organic chemistry totalled $5 in 1998. Today instruction is given to 576; among these are professors from China and Japan. But many of the research students are doing their work away from Columbia—in the laboratories of City College, Barnard College and in other places.

"Upon dyes depend the production not only of dyestuffs, but of drugs, flavorings, synthetic plastics, synthetic tannine, synthetic resins, accelerators for the vulcanization of rubber, photo chemicals, virtually all high explosives and the stabilizers as well as the weapons of chemical warfare.

"For five years an attempt has been made to obtain suitable protective legistion. A temporary war embargo on the importation of dyes that are not made here in satisfactory quantities and at a fair price became a law later. As a result of that embargo we have been able to develop a dye industry starting from seven manufacturers in 1913 that had reached a total of eighty-two in 1920."

Prof. Bogert dispelled some popular ceratitions in speaking of the bearing a synthetic dye industry upon our ional welfare. He said:

"The time is surely coming when it will be necessary only for the physician to state just what effects he wishes to produce, and the chemist can build up for him a compound that will do all that is required and be free from unpleasant after effects, much as the child would build up a new kind of house with the same old blocks. It takes years to solve such problems, of course; Von Bacyer worked twenty years upon the molecular structure of indigo, but he finally solved the mystery."

COLUMBIA TO BUILD BRONZE DOORS MEMORIAL TO ART OF STANFORD WHITE

Architectural Tribute Is Gift to Gould Memorial Library at New York University by His Son-They Will Be Unveiled Next Saturday.

A pair of bronze doors as a memorial to architecture as personified by the late Stanford White have been hung at the entrance to the Gould Memorial Library of New York University, and will be unveiled next Saturday. The doors, which were designed by Lawrenes Grant White, son of Stanford White, are the gift of a committee headed by Thomas Hastings, and their hanging in Gould Memorial Library one of the finest examples of the work of Stanford White, an appropriate memorial to Amorican artists, sculptors and architects.

Several busts of American painters have already been unveiled, and the Stanford White doors are the first of three memorials already under way for "architects" corner." The others are in honor of George B. Post and John Weiter and the Stanford White doors will be seen designed by the son of the man honored.

Results From Conference.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., arrived here yesterday afternoon and talked enthusiastically of his recent trip through the Orient, saying it had given him a deepened interest in the people and problems of China and Japan and a desire to do all in his power to ald those nations in establishing cordial relations with the Western World. With Mrs. Rockefeller and his daughter, Miss Abby, Rockefeller said he had been tremendously impressed with the extraordinary wealth of China, both in population, mineral resources and in agricultural possibilities. He said he was survived as with the patience, self-control, manual skill and mental ability.

The opening of the Pekin Union Medical College, which the Rockefeller Foundation was instrumental in establishing, was the purpose of Mr. Rockefeller's visit to the Far East. Noted medical men and women from this country, Europe, Japan and other parts of the Orient stiended the conference and exercises incidental to the formal opening of the institution.

"My visit to Japan and China," said Mr. Rockefeller, "has made me most optimistic as to the future of these two great nations, whose leaders are increasingly alive to the fact that in friendly relations with each other and the Western world is to be found the greatest assurance of national solidarity and commercial prosperity. In proportion as these contributions are received in a spirit of sympathetic understanding, good will and fairness, will the outcome be satisfactory or disappointing. Anything other than whole hearted peace and cooperation between the East and the West would be the height of folly and is unthinkable. That through the frank, full and sympathetic discussion of the important problems of each of the nations participating in the conference which is now in progress in Washington there may be laid a permaent foundation for mutual confidence and ever increasing cooperation, is most earnestly to be hoped for."

Year's budget, the Governor declared.

Replying to a quistion the Governor said he did not see how it would be possible for the State to do away with the Income tax.

"The revenues are going to fall off," he explained. "All the large sources of revenue will be affected. The corporation tax, the inheritance tax, the income tax are the three big sources of revenue. All will be seriously affected by business conditions. We have got to reach the point of living within our means before we think of voluntarily reducing our revenues."

VERY year brings added popularity to the Pocono Mountains as a winter resort. Long a favorite haunt of summer pleasures, they are gradually attracting to themselves an ever-growing number of those who know the pleasures of ice and snow.

It is here you can enjoy the clink of skates on glassy ice, the drive of skis down snow-clad slopes, sleighing through frost-nipped air and the mad thrill of the toboggan's rush. There are log fires, dinners, dances and jolly good times for all in this land where the snow stays white.

A dry and invigorating climate insures bright clear days and calm quiet nights. Hotels, a number of which are now open all the year, are comfortable and modern. There's no slush, no colds, no grippe. The way to conquer Winter is to meet him in his lair.

For the glow of health and an overflowing of sport and sociability, for the best vacation you ever had, go to the Poconos this winter. They are only three hours from New York and reached by fast and frequent service on the main line of the Lackawanna Railroad.
